“I must find a place to hide!”
 Lightning lit up the sky as Martin Luther tried to hurry his horse to go faster through the slippery mud. The rain beat down on them, and thunder seemed to shake the air. Martin leaned toward his horse’s neck and held on, trying to make himself as small as he could. And then, CRACK! A tree only a few feet away from him lit up with flames as lightning struck it. Martin’s horse jumped in fear and Martin tumbled to the ground. There was nowhere to hide and nothing else he could do, so Martin cried out to God, “If you will save me from this storm, I will become a monk!”

Have you ever been afraid of a storm? Martin certainly was afraid of this storm, but he was even more fearful of the God who controls the weather. Martin knew that God is holy and perfect. He has no sin and He cannot have sin in His presence. God is also just. That means He promises to punish sin, and will keep His word as He always does. Martin knew he was a sinner and that he deserved this punishment that God promised. Do you know that’s true for you and me too? You and I have broken God’s law by our words, actions and thoughts, and we deserve punishment. In the book of Isaiah, God says, And I will punish the world for their evil, and the wicked for their iniquity.” (See Isaiah 13:11.) Martin hoped there was some way to escape this punishment and find a place of safety. He thought maybe he could find it by becoming a monk.

Martin survived the storm and kept his promise to God. Nine days later he showed up in the town of Erfurt at the door of the monastery. (Show map.) This was supposed to be a place set apart from the rest of the world where Martin and the other monks could devote themselves completely to God, to prayer and to doing what was right. As Martin looked around at the peaceful gardens and the bell tower overhead, he thought, Surely this is the place where I will find rest for my body and peace in my heart.

Martin tried his best to be a good monk. He prayed long prayers and sometimes went without eating and drinking so he could think about God. He stayed
